When Gloria Nix's last child announces that he and his girlfriend have just gotten married, Gloria panics. She tries to sell the house out from under her easygoing husband because she decides that her life is over and it would be more comfortable to die in a small apartment located near a funeral home. John responds with humor at every turn. "I feel I'm gonna pass on very soon," she says. "Will it be today?" he asks. "I took two steaks out of the freezer. I'll put one back." A humorous play about the serious subject of adjusting to the changes in life.
